Attendees will be reminded of the meaning of the core social work values and ethical standards, and will discuss the application to their own current practice.

SUPERVISION 101

Participants will be actively engaged in discussion, case study review, and self-assessment of supervision values, knowledge and skills. Initially, attendees will review NASW's standards for social work supervision. We will discuss several models of supervision and apply them to various case studies. Finally, participants will be able to do some self-assessment and reflection of current and future supervision characteristics.
