A Panel on Academic Service and Shared Governance

November 9, 2016

7:00 P.M.

Friends of the Library Room, Alden

This panel discussion will focus on faculty work most commonly referred to as “service”, but perhaps more accurately described as “governance responsibilities.” In training its members, academia focuses on the development of young scholars as researchers and, to a degree, as teachers. We spend little time preparing students for aspects of their careers that involve the review and development of curriculum, peer evaluation and promotion, and participation in shared governance in one’s department, college, university, and profession. The panel will involve brief presentations from four faculty about this aspect of their careers, but most of the time will be available for questions and discussion.
